TOOTH FOUND SHOWS NEW APE SPECIES

Genus of Nebraska Fossil More Closely Resembles Human Than Any Heretofore Discovered.

WASHINGTON, April 26. The previous existence on this continent of a new genus and species of primate "much more closely resembling the human type than it does any known species of ape," although distinct from either, is believed to have been established by the recent discovery of a small tooth in the faunal deposits of Nebraska, according to a paper read at the concluding session here of the National Academy of Sciences by Dr. Henry F. Osborn of the American Museum of Natural History.

A number of authorities, Dr. Osborn said, agreed with his deduction that the discovery had established the existence in the Pliocene period of a "new and independent type" of anthropoid, or man-like animal.

Entire credit for the discovery, he said, belonged to Harold J. Cook, a consulting geologist of Agate, Neb.

NEEDLE GAVE HER LOCKJAW. TRENTON, N.
